Seamless video covering new SLEX now part of international safety features

Seamless, end-to-end video monitoring is one of the safety sequences built into the fully reconstructed South Luson Expressway. It is expected to help reduce incidences of criminal activity and traffic violations.

The new video monitoring system is a key feature of the SLEX project, which is expected to be completed by the end of 2012. The system will provide a continuous stream of video footage from the entire length of the expressway, allowing for real-time monitoring and rapid response to any incidents.

The diagram illustrates the experimental setup for measuring the time delay of a single photon. A laser source emits a pulse into a fiber optic cable. The cable is connected to a beam splitter. One path leads to a detector, and the other path leads to a delay line (a long fiber optic cable) before reaching another beam splitter. The second beam splitter directs the light to a second detector. The time delay is measured by comparing the arrival times at the two detectors.

Figure 1 is a line graph showing the effect of the concentration of the inhibitor on the initial rate of the reaction. The y-axis is labeled 'Rate' and ranges from 0 to 1.0. The x-axis is labeled 'Inhibitor concentration' and ranges from 0 to 1.0. Three curves are shown: a solid line (no inhibitor), a dashed line (inhibitor concentration 0.2), and a dotted line (inhibitor concentration 0.4). All curves start at (0,0) and end at (1.0, 1.0). The solid line is a straight line. The dashed line is concave down, and the dotted line is concave up.
